Subject: Projects We Love: The Collective Experience

Date: Thu, 13 Feb 2014 21:19:53 +0000

Everything is more fun together, especially making things! This week, we're sharing three projects we love about the communities that gather around creativity.

She Makes Comics

By Sequart Research & Literacy Organization

The story of women in comics is a largely untold one, but women have always been a part of the process. She Makes Comics is a documentary film that examines the important role that women have played in this medium, as creators, fans, and everything in between, from the Golden Age of comics until the present.

THE BOOKMOBILE BOOK

THE BOOKMOBILE BOOK

By Projet Mobilivre-Bookmobile Project

From 2001 to 2005, some friends drove an Airstream trailer filled with books and zines around North America. It was called the Bookmobile, and along the way, the scrappy collective gave talks and workshops, connected with thousands of people, and documented it all. Now, they're doing the only thing that makes sense to do: they're making a book about it.

Outerlands: Season One

Outerlands: Season One

By AREA 5

AREA 5's Outerlands is a six-episode documentary series about the human elements of the videogame world: the people and culture behind it all. It will explore the many ways in which players connect over videogames, including game preservation, the culture of game shops, and the social connections (and even relationships) forged somewhere beyond the digital realm.
