 This Week on Kickstarter

NOVEMBER 20, 2012

There's plenty of gratitude to go around in the world of Kickstarter. Creators and backers are giving thanks to each other as projects come to life and rewards land in mailboxes. And we're grateful for the amazing ideas we see every day — including this week's thanks-worthy trio.

All the food that's fit to print

Saucy is a food magazine with a kick. Along with drool-inducing photography and thoughtful recipes (like this guide to the ultimate Thanksgiving sandwich), Saucy shares stories from the kitchen's darker side, including deadly snacks, diabolical eating habits, and the elusive art of satiation. Sounds like perfect reading material for the season of ritual feasts.

When their powers combine

Sportsfriends unites four uniquely hilarious multiplayer games designed to incite pandemonium in your living room. Each game celebrates the experience of playing with other humans in the same physical space, melding forward-thinking interactive experiments and simple, addictive fun. The creators have shared their games at festivals, exhibitions, and even in the middle of a Danish street — but this is the first chance to bring Sportsfriends home.

Caption this

The brainchild of a cartoonist who doubles as an art teacher, Magnet Comic is a three-panel comic strip made funny by you. Each kit comes with a wood-framed whiteboard, dry-erase marker, and four magnetic characters with nine expressions each, so you can tell stories and crack jokes through a wide range of emotions. Overcome with a funny idea? Just erase, arrange, and repeat.
