 This Week on Kickstarter

OCTOBER 11, 2012

While we gear up for New York Comic Con this weekend, check out some new projects that inject a little fantasy into everyday life: A little girl who builds a robot friend, the totally true story of a fake movie, and a comic love story between a nun and a wrestler.

Save it for a rainy day

Alison and Her Rainy Day Robot is a cute comic about a little girl who overcomes rainy-day boredom by building a full-sized robot companion. But her invention goes awry when her supposed-to-be-fun-bot turns out to be, well, downright boring. Lucky for us, Eisner-nominated author Fred Chao is offering backers all kinds of extra-fun rewards to keep things interesting. He also promises penguins.

SCIENCE FICTION LAND {A Stranger Than Fiction Doc}

SCIENCE FICTION LAND {A Stranger Than Fiction Doc}

by Judd Ehrlich/Flatbush Pictures

 Category Documentary

 Location Brooklyn, NY

Out of this world

Based on the true story of a CIA agent who sneaked six US diplomats out of hostile territory by disguising them as the crew of a fake film, Science Fiction Land is a documentary exploring a little-known fact: the "fake film" was real. Written by an enigmatic young inventor in the '70s, this sci-fi dream project collapsed amid a cloud of suspicion — but the tale of its undoing can avoid the same fate.

by Production I.G

 Category Animation

 Location Los Angeles, CA

Romeo vs. Juliet

Set inside the gritty underworld of Japanese professional wrestling, Kick-Heart is the unconventional love story of two pro wrestlers burdened with secrets: one loves to lose, and the other is a nun. Known for breaking boundaries in animation, director Masaaki Yuasa's freewheeling style renders a tender romance with the force of a piledriver.
