I am not against science! I respect it. But in medical field I try to avoid intervention of chemicals and hospitals if there is no emergency. Be as much natural as I can. I don't take pills if there is no serious illness or emergency situation. I am for western medicine when it comes to serious things. I am against daily chemical intake when ppl instead of changing their lifestyle and curing minor pain take pills. I am for prevention for being in bad health. I am for taking care of your body all the time so you don't get health problems! When you have pain is already too late. that means that you did something wrong. and it starts from healthy parents, healthy mum and raising healthy child. And my parents did great job, I never was in hospital except to sow some crazy childhood open sores after falling from trees and ect :)

So it is up to a person to decide to drink alcohol, eat junk, don't do any sports, take medicine for digestion, hangover, headache.... than for sure one day that person will need some serious science invented pill help or if not that person than his kids might need it.

You use the internet, cell phone, email, text, wear clothes that contain polyester, shoes that have rubber, shop in stores with electric lights, carry bags made of plastic, travel by air, and subway. These things are created by science, eating an apple has many effects, most unknown, taking an aspirin has been studied for years. I understand your reluctance, and as I can see I am patient. Just look around you, most of the things you do are related and have been created by people in laboratories, not farmers.
