yes, 4-6 weeks is a really long time to house them in the trailer. If we have to bring them to us for a couple of weeks, I think fine...but that is too long....what if all of them don't fit! then they have to go to garage, which is a disaster waiting to happen

what do we do? have them delivered to the garage and some in the trailer? I don't want them to get damaged but I don't want to pay to house them also...When do you think we will actually install them? 2 months from now?

A storage fee was never discussed with me! I let Chris know from the beginning our hope was to be in our house by end of Dec and let him decide upon when was the proper time to order the kitchen cabinets...Since he is familiar with the timing of new construction homes similar to ours, I assumed he would know what is best....I am not sure what to do here, but I am not happy to hear of $150 per week to store our cabinets...I have sent a note to our builder asking when he thinks we will need the cabinetry, but have not heard from him as of yet...I worry because we ordered the master bath cabinetry not long after the kitchen as well, it will be coming in soon...what can we do here?

Hi [REDACTED]

Wanted to let you know that your cabinets are in and we keep them for two weeks. After the two weeks is up then storage fees are applied to your balance, which is $150.00 per week. So I was trying to find out when you could take delivery of your cabinets and also set up installation of them. Lastly I wanted to talk to you about the granite.

The cabinets came in 8/16/13. So if you want to avoid them please can you call me. Thanks again for getting back to me.

Hi Chris (I know you are away), Joe and Pauline,

My builder requested I let you know we are sheet rocking and doing the hardwood in the next three weeks. We could have a primer coat on the interior in about 4 weeks...

Pauline, I know you called me the other day and you are due a call...been very busy at work and it's hard to make a call...might you be able to put in an email what you wished to discuss?

Thanks,
